i'll run a senderscore and see what's what... hopefully we're okay. when was the last time you sent from RFC? i'll check my email history and see what happened last time.

i'm also going to add rawfuckclub and darkalley domains to my google postmaster account, which runs all sorts of metrics from googles point of view. yanno, cuz they can do that... cuz they're google.

google has been blocking all emails from my old mailserver... which i don't use much any more... but i had a few accounts on it like customer service and SVOTHI crap, etc. it's not like google comes out and tells you why they're upset and how to fix it. i just migrated those accounts to googl btw, another thing on my list of talking points... is how to make communicating with the company more fun and friendly. like... customerservice@pypnetworks.com isn't fun. maybe hello@rawfuckclub.com, care@rawfuckclub.com, help@rawfuckclub.com... or maybe we make up a name of a

Probably because it was sent addressed from RFC newsletter and not Dark Alley newsletter and one is not in your cleated contacts went into my spam folder. did you spamtest it? i'll check that our senderscore reputation wasn't compromised :( really need to be careful with this shit... the ISPs are not forgiving.

i should probably start warming up another IP address for when we burn thru this one. ugh, 14 hour work days.
